Around its eastern end the ranges extend southward toward the Malay peninsula, and in Burmah they are joined by the Himalaya trends. We may trace the occurrence of Middle Paleozoic rocks along this southern route also. Devonian is known from several localities in southwestern Ssi-chuan and adjacent districts in Yiin-nan, among the Paleozoic strata which form the mountain ranges of western Tibet, bordering the Mesozoic red basin on the west. Westward from Ja-ch6u-fu (latitude 300, longitude 1030), in the vicinity of Lin-tschin-shien, L6czy found the Jurassic itself thrown into folds, resting unconformably on strata which he assigns in general terms to Silurian, i. e., early Paleozoic. He refers to the rocks simply as limestone, and makes the correlation without paleontologic evidence. J Beneath these strata...
