Excerpt from The Link, Vol. 7: May, 1949 You should take time now to clean up your equipment before the plastic hardens on everything. Just wash it around in warm, soapy water and it will come clean. Store your plastic and catalyst away from food in some dark, cool spot. All your mounts will now have to be polished and finished. If several objects were imbedded at once in a large mold, you can saw them into individual blocks with a hack saw or regular hand saw. Then to cut the rough edges down quickly, use a file. Get some fine sand paper or emery cloth to eliminate the file marks. You will find that the topside of all your mounts has a tacky surface. There is no way of hardening this, so it will have to come off before a gleaming finish can be achieved. The simplest way to do this is to get an Old razor blade and, holding it firmly between thumb and forefinger, scrape across the top until you reach the hard plastic; then sand like the rest.
