Not illustrated. 1820 Excerpt: .land, and observe the union now subsisting between Monarch and people in the importance of the truths they contain, to the happiness of both, without being forcibly struck with the moral change which has taken place, and finding, in every step of our investigation, fresh matter for gratitude and praise. Within the three first years from the formation of this Society, the Central Committee at Berlin had distributed more than 21,000 copies of the Scriptures; and, in the third year alone, nearly 11,000 copies had been circulated by the Filial Societies. These Filial Societies, already very numerous, and comprehending some of the finest cities and provinces of the kingdom, were con-1817--16tinually increasing in number and activity; and the result of their exertions was declared to be such, at the close of the third year, as to open most pleasing prospects for future times. In furnishing assistance...
