Excerpt from Progressive Poultry Raising Consequently, a commercial demand developed from these people that was fundamental in the growth of the modern marketing services; especially artificial refrigeration. The discovery that eggs can be preserved when kept cold, the building of cold storage ware houses to prepare for periods of scarcity, and the invention of the refrigerator car, have all played their part in supplying the city population with poultry necessities. Armour and Company has been no small factor in the service of storing and transporting these foods. Every family now considers eggs a daily necessity, and, thanks to modern methods, the supply is daily forthcoming.
